There is bipartisan, bicameral concern over the substance of this rule, its impact on consumers, and the FTC's rush to judgment. Four congressional letters have been sent to the FTC and one to the Federal Reserve Board on this rule:

1. Rep. Kelly Armstrong (R-N.D.) – bipartisan letter signed by 40 House members and six Senators urging the FTC to withdraw the proposed rule and issue an ANPRM.
2. Rep. Chris Pappas (D-N.H.)-Rep. Doug LaMalfa (R-Calif.) – letter signed by 29 House members urging the FTC to reopen the comment period.
3. Sen. Cynthia Lummis (R-Wyo.) – letter signed by six Republican Senate Commerce, Science, and Transportation Committee members questioning all aspects of the proposed rule.
4. Rep. Glenn Thompson (R-Pa.) – letter opposing the proposed rule, calling it “grossly misguided.”
5. Rep. Blaine Luetkemeyer (R-Mo.)-Rep. David Scott (D-Ga.) – letter to the Federal Reserve Board pointing out that the proposed rule conflicts with the Truth in Lending Act, which is under the jurisdiction of the Federal Reserve Board.

In total, 72 current members of Congress on both sides of the aisle signed letters last year regarding this rule. Yet the FTC has not substantively responded to questions posed by Congress and has deprived Members and the public essential information of its impact on the auto industry and consumers.
